

At Sweet Timber Frames' shop in Maine, a framer cuts a mortise, or pocket, into a timber. Tenons that protrude from the ends of the timbers fit precisely into mortises in other members of the frame. Some timber framers cut all their joinery by hand; others use computer-guided machinery.

